EAIE Workshop: The Bologna Process in 2008: Is Europe reaching its goals?

Fiona Hunter is Director of International Relations at the Università Carlo Cattaneo–LIUC in Italy. She obtained her first degree in languages after studying in three universities in Scotland, Germany and France, an experience that set her on an early international path. She taught languages at universities first in France and then in Italy where she also ventured into the yacht charter business. In 1996 she combined her academic and business experience and developed the international office for the university where she now works. She is currently studying for a DBA in Higher Education Management. Within the EAIE, she is the President, member of the Steering Committee and Executive Board.
